To always refer to yourself or another asker, you should say "you" instead of "I" when asking a question. So, if someone asks "How do I do this?", a correct response would be "You can fix it by doing this." For example, if you said "how to fix it?" and then said "how do I fix it?", the first one means what action you should take, while the second one means where you are. If you're not sure which one to use, rephrase your question using something like "What can I do?" or "How can I...". ##ARTICLEparaphrased text here Even though 「これ」 that 「あれ」 A: Does she want some soup? 「彼女はスープが欲しいですか?」 B: Yes, she does. 「はい、彼女は(スープが)欲しいです」 A: Does he play the guitar? 「彼はギターを弾きますか?」 B: No, he doesn't. (No, he does not.) 「いいえ、彼は(ギターを)弾きません」 That doesn't make sense. (That does not make sense.) 「それは矛盾している」 It doesn't snow much in Japan, does it? 「日本ではそんなに雪降らないでしょ?」 Besides, 「does」 is only used for the third person singular when two people or more are involved and „do” is used for other people. Also, the verb form of do will change according to who you're addressing. I/you/they walk a lot. 「私/あなた/彼らはたくさん歩きます」 She/he/it walks a lot. 「彼女/彼/それはたくさん歩きます」 By and large, 「-es」 is appended to verbs which end in „o”. This is why „do” becomes „does” for the third person singular. Do you sing? 「あなたは歌いますか?」 Does she sing? 「彼女は歌いますか?」 Do they like pasta? 「彼らはパスタが好きですか?」 Does your brother like pasta? 「あなたの弟はパスタが好きですか?」 When trying to emphasize something, instead of adding „-s”, you can add a do or does in front of the verb. She works a lot. → She does work a lot. 「彼女はたくさん働きます」 → 「彼女は本当にたくさん働きます」 You run fast. → You do run fast. 「あなたは走るのが速いです」 → 「あなたは本当に走るのが速いです」 Generally, though, „do” is used before a verb in the present simple tense, whereas „does” is used for verbs that end with „o”. In addition, only for the third person singular form of verbs do/does are used. To help you become more proficient at using do and does, I will briefly review the two words again. Because it's an important grammar rule, many learners find it tricky to get right. Fortunately, this article is here to help you with that.
