You can no longer start a service in background in 8.0, but you can use JobScheduler to achieve similar results. There is also a JobIntentService helper class that allows you to switch to JobScheduler from service without much refactoring. And you cannot use PendingIntent pointing to a service, but you can use one pointing to an Activity or BroadcastReceiver. If you had a working widget pre 8.0, and now you need to make it work on android 8.0, just perform this simple steps: Change your IntentService class to JobIntentService Rename service onHandleIntent method to onHandleWork (same parameters) Add BIND_JOB_SERVICE permission to your service in the manifest: To start this service, you must no longer use context.startService. Instead use enqueueWork static method (where JOB_ID is just an unique integer constant, must be the same value for all work enqueued for the same class): enqueueWork(context, MyWidgetService.class, JOB_ID, intent); For clicks, replace your PendingIntent that was pointing to service with a PendingIntent that points to a BroadcastReceiver. Since your subclass of AppWidgetProvider is a BroadcastReceiver itself, you might as well use it: Intent myIntent = new Intent(context, MyAppWidgetProvider.class); myIntent.setAction("SOME_UNIQUE_ACTION"); PendingIntent = PendingIntent.getBroadcast(context, 0, myIntent, PendingIntent.FLAG_UPDATE_CURRENT); In onResume start the service using enqueueWork (if your PendingIntent was starting the activity, just leave it be - it'll work just fine on android 8.0+): @Override public void onResume(Context context, Intent intent) { super.onResume(context, intent); if (intent.getAction().equals("SOME_UNIQUE_ACTION")) { MyWidgetService.enqueueWork(...); } } To ensure that the widget will work on old devices, make sure you have WAKE_LOCK permission in your manifest (used by JobIntentService on old devices). That's it. This widget will now work properly on both new and old devices. The only real difference will be that if your 8.0 device is in doze mode it may not update widget all that often, but that shouldn't be a problem because if it is dozing, that means that user can't see your widget right now anyways. Edgar Cervantes / Android Authority We have all encountered problems with Google Play at some point. Every app has its issues. Yet, few things are more frustrating than trying to download that new game you've been waiting to play for ages, only to have your download pending indefinitely. We are here to help! Here are some common fixes to the notorious Play Store download pending error and other common problems. See also: How to fix common Google Play Store error codes How to fix the Play Store download pending error Editor's note: Some of the steps in this guide were put together using a Pixel 4a with 5G running Android 12. Keep in mind steps might be different depending on your device and the Android version you're running. More often than not, the Play Store download pending error culprits are apps updating simultaneously. You will also encounter the problem if you download multiple apps simultaneously or a couple of huge ones. If you urgently need to download Uber to get a ride, for example, there is a solution. Keep track of updates: Launch the Google Play Store. Tap on your profile picture in the top-right corner. Select Manage apps & device. Tap on the Manage tab. You will see which applications are in the process of being updated or downloaded. Just press the X next to their name to cancel the download and proceed with getting the app you urgently need. Check your connection Edgar Cervantes / Android Authority This should always be one of the first steps you take, as the issue might not even be with the Play Store. It's always a good idea to ensure you're connected to the internet. If you are using Wi-Fi, try opening a website and seeing if it loads. You can also test your internet speed here. If nothing else is working, you likely have an internet problem. Try restarting your router first. Those using data might want to see if their cellular connection is on: Open the Settings app. Go into Network & internet. Select SIMs. Toggle Mobile data on. If you're outside your country or network coverage, also toggle Roaming on (this may incur extra charges). Make sure you've enabled data downloads, too: Open the Google Play Store. Tap on your profile picture in the top-right corner. Hit Settings. Expand the Network preferences section. Go into App download preference. Make sure the Over any network option is turned on. Edgar Cervantes / Android Authority A common cause for Google Play problems is a lack of storage on your phone or SD card. Usually, you will receive a notification if your storage is low when attempting a download. However, if you still want to make sure storage is not causing the download to pend, there are a couple of things you can do. Check how much storage you're using: Open the Settings. Go into Storage. This page will show you how much data you have at your disposal. If the download is still pending, your SD card might be at fault — it might not be positioned or set up correctly. Cancel the download, eject the SD card, then carefully reposition it and reattempt. Restart your device if you aren't downloading anything and your connection is fine, but your download is still pending, you should try restarting your device. It might be another no-brainer step, but it's a surprisingly effective one. Just press and hold the power button on your device, then tap Restart. How to restart an Android phone: Press and hold the Power button. Select Restart. Download apps through your browser instead Edgar Cervantes / Android Authority You don't need to use the Google Play Store app to download applications to your phone. That's the beauty of the cloud! You can start downloads from any browser, even when using a computer. How to start Android app downloads from any browser: Open your browser of choice and go to the Google Play Store website. Log into your Google Account. It needs to be the same one you're using on your device. Look for the app you want to download and select it. Hit Install. Select which device you want to download the app on. Hit Install. Also read: How to change your default Google account Clear Google Play app cache and data If the steps above do not help, it's time to try something different. Clearing the Google Play Store app cache often solves many problems, including download pending issues. Clear cache and storage on Android: Open the Settings app. Go into Apps. Find the Google Play Store app under See all apps. Tap on Storage & cache. Hit Clear Cache. You can also select Clear storage for a clean start. Are your downloads still stubbornly pending? Sometimes an update or security patch might be all that's needed. How to update your Android phone: Open the Settings app. Go into System. Select System update. Tap on Check for update. Follow instructions to complete any pending updates. Check if the steps above do not help, it's time to try something different. Clearing the Google Play Store app cache often solves many problems, including download pending issues. Clear version, tap where it says Update Play Store. A notification will let you know whether or not the app is up to date. If a new version is available, it will be downloaded automatically after tapping on the option. Change your Google account Edgar Cervantes / Android Authority One of the other methods that might help you avoid the download pending error is removing or switching the Google account associated with the Play Store. How to remove your Google account from the Play Store: Launch the Google Play Store. Tap on your profile picture in the top-right. Tap on the Expand arrow next to your account info. Select Manage accounts on this device. Tap on the Google account you want to remove. Hit Remove account. Restart your device. How to re-add your Google account: Once it's back up, open the Settings. Select Passwords & accounts. Tap on Add Account. Hit Google. Input your login info. Open the Google Play Store and retry your download. Edgar Cervantes / Android Authority If you are at the end of your rope and nothing seems to help, a more drastic step might be in order. Uninstalling all Play Store updates might do the trick. How to uninstall all Google Play Store app updates: Open the Settings app. Go into Apps. Find the Google Play Store under See all apps. Select it. Tap on the three-dot menu button in the top-right corner. Select Uninstall updates. Hit OK. You can now update the Google Play Store again using the steps listed in the "Check for system updates" section above. Try downloading the app again and see if this does the trick. Read next: How to install third-party apps without the Google Play Store Factory data reset If all else fails, maybe you need to hit the red emergency button you've been trying to avoid all along. A factory data reset will wipe your phone clean and leave it back the way it was when you first turned it on (at least software-wise). This means all your photos, videos, and other files will be deleted, so make sure to back them up before performing a factory data reset. How to perform a factory data reset on Android: Open the Settings app. Go into System. Hit Reset options. Select Erase all data (factory reset). Hit Erase all data. Enter your PIN. Hit Erase all data again to confirm your choice. I had a similar issue after trying to install a custom ROM onto an old tablet. In my case, the solution was to change to a different build of GApps. I had tried to install the Slim6 ROM (Android 6.0.1 Marshmallow) onto a Samsung Galaxy Tab 2 GT-P5110, with Open GApps Pico (also tried Nano). This appeared to work: I could add my Google Account and browse apps in the Google Play Store, but anything I tried to install or update just hung on "Pending..." None of the normal advice about clearing caches worked. I fixed the problem by installing the Delta version of GApps base, after which everything seemed to work fine. I didn't even run into the Certification issue mentioned by @Robert - maybe my setup was too old! If you run into the Pending Downloads problem after installing a custom ROM, my advice is to research the threads for your ROM in the XDA Forums, and look for a known-good version of GApps that works with that ROM. Hope this helps someone else in the future!

2018-9-17 - In a few minutes go back & check. For me everything was updated. So after updating my keynote to oreo my Google play store is not updating any of my apps and I can't download anything new. Tired clearing data and cache and restarting but still no fix. Also tried disconnecting WiFi and cellular data and nothing. 2018-4-1 - Apr 1, 2018 at 10:52 PM. #11. It's not a phone issue, it's not technically a Play Store "issue", there appears to be a limit to about 2 simultaneous downloads from the Play Store. If 2 apps are updating and you try to install something, it will stay on "pending" until what you want gets to the head of the queue. 2019-11-16 - Search titles only: Newer Than: Search this thread only.
