Giraffe

A giraffe is an African mammal which is widely known, thanks to its incredible height. The scientific name for the giraffe is Giraffa camelopardalis. The "giraffa" is derived from the Arabic word zirafa, which means "giraffe." The "camelopardalis" is a reference to the fact that early visitors to Africa thought that giraffes might be a cross between camels and leopards, since they have the humped backs of camels and the spots of leopards.

The giraffe's scattered range extends from Chad in the north to South Africa in the south and from Niger in the west to Somalia in the east. Giraffes usually inhabit savannas, grasslands, and open woodlands. giraffes are also held in captivity in zoos and conservation parks in many parts of the world,for the people who want to see these animals in person without taking a safari trip.

At first sight, a giraffe looks rather bizarre. The animals have long necks and legs, with the front legs being slightly longer than the back legs, so that giraffes appear to have a sloped or humped body structure. A giraffe's coat is tawny, with orange brown spots. Giraffes also have thick, muscular shoulders to support their necks. They also have dark purple prehensile tongues which are used to grasp and manipulate things.

Giraffes are herbivores that are highly selective in choosing food. Most of their food is the leaves and young shoots of trees or shrubs. Their long necks and long tongues are also very handy pick up leaves on tall trees, especially acacia trees . Like the camel, the giraffe can survive a few days without drinking. His body still be hydrated because giraffes can rely on fluids from the leaves.
